Community empowerment

HACC’s housing work led to the creation of Rogers Park Women, a community organizing group of about 70 Black women. They focused on economic development by starting businesses and leading employment trainings for people of color. Why did they focus on jobs? Rogers Park borders on rich white suburbs, including Evanston, which was a dry city up until the 1970s. Residents came to nearby Rogers Park seeking alcohol and drugs. In the absence of well-paying jobs for low-income people, this new market created an opportunity to make a stable income, further deteriorating Rogers Park’s socio-economic stability.

HACC families organized and protested demanding affordable housing and other essentials in the 1980s.

Adults & Families

HACC offers tools to help adults and families change their lives and gain the skills they need to flourish. These programs make earning a GED, learning English, and parent-child bonding achievable goals!

- 832 people re-entering from prison found support for their job hunt

Children & Youth

Serving Rogers Park children is truly the backbone of HACC’s work. HACC programs help build the brains of the future change-makers in our city— from Head Start pre-school to after-school tutoring to helping youth apply to college.

- 150 youth participated in after-school and summer activities

Health

Affordable and high quality health care is hard to find for low-income individuals and families. HACC provides a low-cost dental clinic and outreach about heart disease, breast cancer, and HIV/AIDS.

- 9,637 people learned about HIV/AIDS prevention

Emergency Needs

HACC offers services for people in crisis. Whether a person is escaping violence at home, needs a food pantry to stave off hunger, or is unable to pay the electric bill, HACC is their safety net.

- 121 domestic violence survivors received court support
